Scores are obtained by calculating the mean of the items used to define each factor. Adding the item values and dividing that number by the number of items in each subscale. The higher the scores can assist in identifying higher safety & lethality risks for stalking victims.

It is critical to remember, that there is no sure way of identifying risks and lethality for victims of any crime. There are incidents where there are no warning signs at all. This scale should only be used as a tool, not as a definite way to identify or rule out any risks.
